New life line for Whiskey Springs

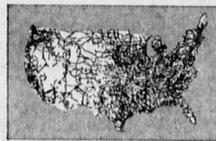

Wasteland turns to wonderland across the changing face of America as Edison and other investor-owned electric companies bring the transforming touch of low-cost electricity to communities with quaint names, colorful pasts—and suddenly unlimited futures.

Deserts come alive. Forgotten slopes become sports resorts. Arid acres bloom with beautiful living, as the switch is flipped that turns on the all-electric future.

And it's important to every taxpayer to note that these minor miracles do not wait upon government planning. They do not need to use public funds.

America's self-supporting investor-owned electric companies are able and ready to see that the clean pure power of electricity flows through the veins of any American community—without spending a penny of tax money. Not a penny.

Investor ownership is the American way, the successful way to power up a growing nation.

Investor-owned electric companies plan ahead for all-electric future

Above map shows principal electric transmission lines of the nation's investor-owned electric companies as of 1970. A major portion of the new transmission lines in the United States will be built under the companies' eight-billion dollar program.

The actual record of Edison and other investor-owned business-managed electric utility companies provides the best assurance of abundant, low-cost power for all America's needs today, tomorrow, and in the all-electric future.
